Since Joan is working on the webpage, see if we can get better information in the entry fields. One that jumped out at me is highlighted below.

What is the current site status?

Site activities to date have included removal actions, or short-term cleanups, to address immediate threats to human health and the environment. Removal actions in 2011 stabilized the waste pits with a protective cap and prevented direct human and benthic contact with the waste materials.

EPA and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers are maintaining the cap, which is containing dioxin-contaminated material. A special permits evaluation process governs activities at a water body area around the site. EPA has completed a remedial investigation for the site. Feasibility study activities are underway.

All,

The DRAFT CIP has been removed from the publicly available documents and it is no longer visible on the San Jacinto webpage under "Additional Reports and Documents."

The following statement will be published as a "Topic in focus" on the San Jacinto webpage at 6 p.m.:

"An update to the San Jacinto Community Involvement Plan is under development and will be published once complete."

Let me know if there is anything else required. --Joan

Donn asked we remove the CIP from 2010. It has some bad information and citizens were inquiring about it at the last community meeting. A disclaimer will be posted indicating the new CIP is being revised and will be posted (soon?). Based on related discussions in other meeting earlier this week, this seems a prudent action. Donn indicates he and contractor are working to revise the new CIP as quickly as possible.
